

Available just in time for Campus Equity Week, Joe Berry's long awaited book Reclaiming the Ivory Tower is now available. Berry is a long-time academic labor organizer, formerly in the Bay Area and now in Chicago. He has been one of the primary spiritual leaders of the Coalition of Contingent Academic Labor.

According to its website reclaimingtheivorytower.org, this book is "the first organizing handbook for contingent faculty...It examines the situation of adjunct professors in U.S. higher education today and puts forward an agenda around which they can mobilize to transform their jobs—and their institutions. In this context, Reclaiming the Ivory Tower also provides a guidepost for all those concerned about higher education: tenure track faculty, students, graduate employees, parents, other campus workers, and anyone interested in why a new labor movement has grown up on campuses across the United States and Canada.

"Full of concrete suggestions for action—from starting a campus committee to finding allies in the community—and based on extensive interviews with organizers, Reclaiming the Ivory Tower is the most comprehensive and engaged account to date of the possibilities for a movement that has important lessons for labor organizing in general, as well as for the future of higher education in the United States."

The book, in an inexpensive paperback version, can be purchased directly from the main website or through any of the major internet booksellers.
